Foreword

The voluntary sector today is facing its most challenging times. The debate with regard to the sector ranges from its relevance to sustainability and survival. In recent times, this debate has gone beyond the select to the open arena, involving a wide and diverse range of stakeholders. The global financial crisis, shrinking space for the voluntary sector and similar issues have impacted the work of the sector. The voices demanding transparency and accountability from various public institutions, promoting popular participation of the poor and the marginalised in development and social change, and many other such actions are diminishing. This does not augur well for a democracy like India.

Ensuring the survival of small initiatives at the grassroots level is an immediate challenge for the sector. Increased dependency of such voluntary initiatives on state funds and corporates through their Corporate Social Responsibility (CSR) initiatives is a shift that is leading to gradual reduction in mass mobilisation for pro-poor action. Voluntary organisations are also facing internal challenges revolving around internal governance, transparency and accountability questions, and emerging leadership crises.

Organisations like VANI are very important and crucial and play a strategic role. VANI has continued to gain strength through its continuous engagement with different stakeholders. It has emerged as a strong voice of the sector.

In 2010-11, VANI accelerated its efforts to address important issues like the FCRA Bill 2010, Direct Taxes Code, etc. VANI has to continue to play this important role and I am sure that it will contribute to strengthening the voluntary sector internally as well as build a facilitative and enabling environment externally.

I take this opportunity to thank all partners of VANI and the staff for their cooperation and support.

Preface

I along with my team and the working committee have a great pleasure in presenting the 23rd Annual Report of VANI, which covers the period between April 2010 and March 2011.

VANI's contribution towards creating an enabling environment is recognized by everyone, not only by the voluntary sector, but also by government and the private sector. VANI has been very closely associated with the ups and downs of the voluntary sector in India for two decades. The birth of VANI was a response to the unreasonable restrictions and controls initiated by the Indian government in 1988. At the time, there existed very powerful and effective thematic networks on issues like environment, education, governance, rights of the marginalized, etc, but the founders of VANI felt the absence of a voice for enabling the environment of the voluntary sector as a whole. Therefore the conception, history and existence of VANI is very closely associated with the state of the voluntary sector in India.

Trends:

Imposing restrictions on the voluntary sector is the manifestation of a mindset which became obvious when Emergency was declared in the country in the mid-1970s. The Foreign Contribution Regulation Act (1976) came as the most visible sign of this. Since then, irrespective of the party in power, the space for voluntary action has been squeezed in a very systematic manner. The winds of liberalization and reform started and ended with the business/service sector, encapsulated in the popular slogan 'end of licence/inspector Raj'. The new Ministry of Corporate Affairs was created with a much reformed Indian Companies Act. Protection of small and medium enterprises was ensured with necessary changes in regulation and supporting schemes. The country saw a sudden rise in foreign investments along with tax rebates for private players. Private-Public Partnership (PPP) became the flavour of the day.

Such reforms never touched other sectors like agriculture or the voluntary sector. The voluntary sector watched and waited for its turn to come, but unfortunately the tide reversed. The only achievement the sector saw was the National Policy on the Voluntary Sector, adopted by the Union cabinet in 2007. Interestingly, subsequent actions of the Union government have gone against the promises made in this policy. Even today there is no department or ministry within the government which can be called a nodal ministry for the voluntary sector. Since there is a lot of diversity in the tasks performed by voluntary organisations, several departments, ministries or entities attempt to control the sector. It will be correct to say that the voluntary sector is a highly controlled sector in India.

The last two decades saw many changes in laws to aid investments. FERA (Foreign Exchange Regulation Act) became FEMA (Foreign Exchange Management Act) whereas FCRA 1976 when revised in 2010 brought far more stringent provisions for the voluntary sector. Registration laws for companies have been liberalized and systematized in the new Indian Companies Act, but we still have the outdated and confused Societies Registration Act, 1860 under which any entity can be registered. Various provisions of the Income Tax Act have been modified to give numerous benefits to private companies, whereas we still fight every year to safeguard our charitable status under Section 2(15). Associations and federations of corporates, like Confederation of Indian Industries (CII), Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry (FICCI), etc, have expanded with an enabling environment and the only ‘association’ of organisations in the voluntary sector has had to struggle to create space for its voice to be heard.

It is always said that national level policies impact realities on the ground. The harassment of small and medium sized voluntary organisations has become rampant in the last decade. The space to innovate and ask critical questions has gradually got restricted. The sector is moving very fast from flexible funding to project specific funding. This not only restricts innovation and institution building but also hampers the work on entitlements for the poor. We are gradually falling into the trap of becoming sub-contractors. Unfortunately, arbitrary interpretation by government functionaries and corruption at lower levels is making smaller voluntary organisations either perish or get sucked into the corruption cycle.

But all is not gloomy because many new opportunities await us. Since 2009, the Finance Minister has started the practice of inviting a delegation from the voluntary sector for ‘pre-budget’ consultations. The government has started recognising VANI as the spokesperson of the sector by inviting it to various policy debates along with private sector associations. The Planning Commission has engaged the voluntary sector in formulation of the new Five Year Plan. The recent citizen’s movement against ‘corruption in higher places’ has reinforced the fact that the voluntary sector cannot be neglected while making policies and laws of societal importance. The private sector is also aggressively entering the arena of development through foundations and Corporate Social Responsibility (CSR) initiatives. Slowly, development actors in the country are coming to realise that one cannot achieve holistic development and growth of the country without working with each other.

VANI At a Glance

VANI’s initiatives are based on two overarching strategies, namely, strengthening the voluntary sector and articulating voice of the sector. Under strengthening the voluntary sector, the focus is on strengthening the internal governance and management systems of voluntary organisations on the one hand, and on the other providing information and technical inputs to facilitate informed choices regarding the latest issues facing the sector. The second strategy – articulating voice of the sector – works towards creating an enabling environment for the sector by raising an articulated voice through research based advocacy and educational events. Many new rules, regulations and systems are being designed which impact the very existence of voluntary organisations. Most of them are modified or interpreted or implemented without consulting the voluntary sector. Even in cases where views from the sector are invited, the period is so short that by the time this information reaches the grassroots level, decisions have already been made. This situation is further complicated by the technical nature or understanding of the impact of such proposed changes on the sector. The diversity of the sector also hinders attempts to have a unified stand on contested issues. Through its strategy VANI helps all voluntary organisations, irrespective of their size, location and nature, to not only understand issues but also articulate their reactions, suggestions and views on the subject.

Such views are collected, consolidated and put forward by VANI on behalf of the sector. VANI engages policy makers, implementers and policy influencers to understand sector's concerns.

The Year That Was: 2010–11

The ghost of FCRA, which was haunting the voluntary sector for quite sometime, came out of the box. In its last days the old FCRA had more unwritten conditionalities and practices than publicly disclosed procedures. The secrecy adopted by the Ministry of Home Affairs often led to penalisation and harassment of genuine organisations. There was hardly any way to know the reasons for rejection or getting time bound action on applications.

VANI along with its partners was active in influencing the formation of the new FCRA. In spite of persistent efforts to influence members of Parliament, many contested provisions remained unchanged in the new Act passed in 2010. VANI conducted a series of consultations among its members as well with senior officials of the ministry in Delhi when the draft was made public, and mobilised for changes in the final rules. The final rules, made applicable from 1 May 2011, address our concerns on contentious issues such as:

- Renewal of FCRA registration (also allowing for renewal in the fourth year, i.e., one year prior to the five-year period)
- Online submission of applications for greater transparency and accountability
- Investigation of documents only up to six years
- Transfer of foreign currency from FCRA certificate-holding organisations to FCRA registered organizations
- Allocation of administrative expenses
- Harassment on grounds of rejection

VANI held intensive interventions to educate organisations about the provisions and safeguards related to various regulatory mechanisms, in particular the Direct Taxes Code (DTC). In its advocacy VANI has been able to make some changes but it remains an area of concern. Many favourable provisions have been taken away by the government under the DTC, and VANI continues to advocate with the government on these issues.

VANI has gained recognition from the government as the federation of the voluntary sector, in line with various industrial and commercial chambers. VANI now gets a proper place in government consultations and debates. VANI is a member of various taskforces of the Planning Commission and Indian government. VANI played an important role in developing Voluntary Guidelines on Social, Environmental and Economic Responsibilities of Business under the Ministry of Corporate Affairs. VANI is also a member of Task Force Members of the Constitution of Steering Committee on Voluntary Sector for the formulation of the 12th Five Year Plan (2012-2017) and Business Responsibilities (TF-BRS).

VANI has been able to influence changes in the visa requirements and relative conditionalities for volunteers in India. We submitted petitions to the government and the ruling party on the irresponsible statements made by many senior people from the government against the sector in connection with the Naxalite problem. VANI delegations twice met senior officials of the Home Ministry to press the need for development projects rather than mindless violence. As a sector, we do not believe in violence by any party. Taking its work further on the issue of strengthening internal governance of the voluntary sector, VANI produced a handbook on good governance; started research on model internal policies; and conducted a study on the regulatory regime in various countries.

Recognising the fact that VANI always does not have the technical competency to understand the complexity of a problem, VANI has constituted two advisory groups. One is of chartered accountants and financial managers, and the other is of senior leaders from the sector.

In order to solicit feedback, suggestions and concerns from the sector VANI has started an e-helpline on its website. Various state and regional meetings were also organised during 2010-11.

The year also saw VANI play a rejuvenated role in the international arena. VANI hosted the Asian regional meeting of National Platforms and co-hosted the structural dialogue organized with Asian voluntary organisations by the European Union. VANI became an active member and important contributor in Open Forum, Reality of Aid, International Forum of National Platforms and Affiliated Group of National Association under CIVICUS. VANI was invited to a number of important international events.

In order to improve its communications, VANI has redesigned its website and e-newsletter. We have also started a blog and logged in to Facebook to interact with larger audiences.

Today, VANI communicates with more than 7000 organisations through its electronic mail system. Membership increased from 344 to 362 during the year. We are thankful to our members for their continuous support.

I would also like to thank VANI's financial and technical supporters who help us in achieving our goals. We were fortunate to get flexible support for our initiatives from ICCO, The Commonwealth Foundation, Coordination SUD Irish Aid and Oxfam India. The International Forum for National Platforms (IFP) supported our international initiatives.

I am grateful to VANI's working committee which has always guided and supported me. Support from the chairperson, treasurer and other members of the working committee is important in making our presence felt in these times of crisis.

Last but not least is the contribution and dedication of the VANI team, who give a practical face to all the dreams and aspirations of VANI's members and its working committee. Your valuable comments and suggestions are solicited.

In solidarity

VANI'S OVERARCHING STRATEGY

- ❖ Articulating voice of the voluntary sector
- ❖ Strengthening the voluntary sector

Introduction

The year 2010-11 was a memorable year for the voluntary sector as it raised many existential challenges. On the one hand the scope of voluntary action, both thematically and geographically, expanded, but on the other hand many new provisions to control the sector were introduced. The voluntary movement made a mark for itself through the larger mobilisation of people on issues of accountability and transparency and voluntary organisations became major contributors to the successful implementation of many development initiatives. The sector also attracted new talent and institutions into its fold. However, the sector also faced numerous challenges to its very existence due to restrictive regulations and practices. New trends in the availability of financial resources made the sector look for creative ways to avail them. In today's challenging times, the expectations from the voluntary sector ranges from improving the lives of marginalised communities in remote rural areas to increasing participation of the urban poor in the large metro cities of India. Policy-making institutions look towards voluntary organisations for input and advice to mainstream people's concerns. The process of formulation of the 12th Five Year Plan is a classic example of this. The Finance Minister has started the practice of pre-budget consultations with leaders of the voluntary sector. Many new doors are being opened for engaging the voluntary sector.

Unfortunately, along with this bright hope there exists a darker side of increasing controls and harassment of voluntary organisations. This year saw many voluntary activists losing their lives for raising issues of justice and equality. Many activists who questioned rampant injustice were put behind bars. Instead of rationalising and professionalising the regulatory regime of the voluntary sector, many new controls were imposed. They were imposed through the new Foreign Contribution Regulation Act (FCRA), 2010, the Direct Taxes Code (DTC) which will be in force from April 2012 and the visa requirements for foreign volunteers wanting to work in the sector. The situation is still worse for small and medium sized organisations working in remote locations in disturbed areas. Many of them are either forced to curtail operations or will have to report about their work daily to the local police. While some uninformed, negative stories in the media did tarnish the image of the voluntary sector, many voices also got heard in the media. VANI salutes the spirit of freedom of expression of the country.

This is undoubtedly the result of the undying spirit of millions of voluntary organisations working across India in adverse conditions motivated by their will of creating a better socio-economic environment for the common people. It is an irony of fate that though the sector plays such an indispensable and constructive role in the development of the country, it still struggles to build its credibility among stakeholders. VANI not only supports this spirit of voluntarism but also strongly advocates the core values of justice, equality and mutual respect for one and all.

The sector is facing a huge challenge of depleting capacity to respond to opportunities and threats. The support which was available to build skills and knowledge is no longer available in the same scale; however, there is a growing demand to perform better and better. This gap is more visible and obvious in small voluntary organisations. There is also demand for some visible signs of internal good governance and management systems within organisations. This year, the Planning Commission published its report on the formation of the National Accreditation Council. After getting rejected by the sector, it was reformulated. It does highlight the need for some internal systems like self-certification or accreditation.

VANI's founders had realised the need for a national network which can work towards creating an enabling environment for the voluntary sector two decades ago. Today, VANI with the support of its members and friends, is striving to become an effective platform which can articulate the voice of the voluntary sector and also work for strengthening the sector from within. The relevance of VANI has become more important nowadays as it is also a collective body to raise contested issues with government, donors and other stakeholders. VANI has also become an effective link for mutual sharing and learning with similar global networks. As a coordinating body for the Asian Coalition of National Platforms, VANI is trying to articulate the concerns of the Asian region. VANI has played a vital role in strengthening the sector from within, raising its internal standards and forming a structured framework within which organisations can work and gain more credibility.

Articulating Voice of the Voluntary Sector

The multiplicity of issues and diversity of the 3.2 million voluntary organisations working in India restricts their capacity to be aware of recent developments which could affect them. Most changes in policy take place in the national capital with very few channels providing information to those voluntary organisations working in remote locations. Government sometimes invites suggestions from stakeholders at very short notice; this is insufficient for many small organisations to be able to share their concerns. Therefore, it is very important that VANI not only share information about the changes but also collect and articulate voice. Frequently, this lack of information is also exploited by line departments to harass grassroots groups. VANI is committed to serving and supporting all voluntary organisations who work for the betterment of the marginalised of India within the constitutional framework of the country. It has been facilitating research-based advocacy on issues and policies confronting the development process.

Being an independent voice of the sector, VANI raises these concerns at different levels – from the local to the international. In the year 2010-11, VANI continued its ongoing advocacy on new emerging issues in addition to the older ones.

I. Articulating concerns on changes in laws and the regulatory framework affecting voluntary organisations

🔗 Foreign Contributions Regulation Act (FCRA), 2010

The last year, 2010, was a very significant period for the voluntary sector in India. The FCRA bill which had been lying in cold storage since 2006 was suddenly introduced in both houses of parliament by the Ministry of Home Affairs. Taking the excuse of the ‘law and order situation’ in the country and the need to control the ‘foreign hand’, the bill was passed without much space for debate. With the passage of this bill, the future of voluntary action in India was sealed. It gave a big blow to the National Policy on the Voluntary Sector (2007) formulated by the government and the recommendations of the Second Administrative Reforms Commission (2008). The passing of the FCRA 2010 also indicates a change in the intention of the government – from reforming and enabling the voluntary sector to controlling and commanding it.

Once the bill became an Act, VANI adopted a two-fold strategy – first, to inform all FCRA certificate-holding organisations about the change and, advocating with the Ministry of Home Affairs for better rules. Rules can’t supersede the Act, but at least rules can make the provisions of the Act clearer to avoid misinterpretation. VANI provided information through workshops, meetings, newsletters, e-mails, etc, encouraging all organisations to follow the new instructions and keep their records in order.

Under its second strategy VANI organised consultations with technical experts, finance officials and chartered accountants to get feedback on the practical side of FCRA. Similar consultations were organised with heads of various voluntary organisations. In one such consultation, senior officers from the ministry were invited. VANI provided a petition and many of the demands were accepted by the ministry. VANI also appealed to its members and non-members to write in with their concerns to the ministry. The final rules became applicable from 1 May 2011. During the framing of the rules, VANI started formal and informal advocacy. The new FCRA rules acknowledged some of the recommendations submitted by VANI.

One of the most contested areas in which VANI along with its partners have been arguing with the government was renewal of FCRA registration after every 5 years. It is not that the voluntary sector is scared of its performance, but is concerned about the process. Evidence has shown in the past that the sector wants to avoid the so-called ‘secrecy’ and ‘inefficiency’ of the line department.

Rather than being perceived as defensive, the sector wants to ensure efficiency of the FCRA department in its dealings with voluntary organisations. If the new rules demand new obligations by the sector, they must also ensure efficiency and transparency of the department. Acting along these lines, VANI demanded online submissions of renewal applications, mandatory annual submissions and applications for new registration. Online acknowledgement of applications and tracking will be introduced. No doubt submission of hardcopies will be necessary, but the online facility will provide accountability from the department.

VANI also received complaints from many organisations that the FCRA department demands 20-year old documents during investigations. To put a specific cap on this, VANI suggested aligning this requirement as per the Income Tax Act. With this change, the FCRA department can check and investigate documents of up to five years. If we look at this in the context of a five-year renewal period, it seems logical. However, we recommend that organisations keep key documents for a longer period.

Ambiguity remained in the rules about transferring foreign currency from FCRA certificate-holding organisations to other FCRA-registered organisations. This issue was raised while interacting with many large organisations who work in partnership with smaller organisations. The transfer of funds is an important component of the relationship. VANI demanded and received written clarification from the FCRA department on this issue. Now, foreign currency can be transferred to another FCRA-holding organisation, unless the receiving organisation has been black-listed or found a defaulter by the law. VANI has suggested to all organisations to check and take written documents from receiving organisations about their status in this matter.

The Act stated that administrative expenses should not be more than 50 per cent of the total expenses. There was ambiguity in understanding this provision. VANI suggested that administrative expenses be defined. This was subsequently accepted by the department. Now, as per the rules, all expenses which are directly made in implementing a project like salaries of doctors and nurses in health projects, researchers and campaigners in advocacy and research organisations or teachers in educational projects are not considered as administrative costs. We suggest that voluntary organisations having FCRA registration carefully distribute their expenses across administrative and project expenses.

Many organisations expressed their concern about the impact of FCRA registration renewal on long term projects if it comes up for approval in the fifth year. No donor will sign a project if the organisation's FCRA is going to come up for renewal. To accommodate this concern, a provision allowing for renewal in the fourth year, i.e., one year prior to the due year, has been allowed.

Another contested area is the grounds for rejection. Any organisation which has a political objective in its by-laws or is found in practice to have a political objective can be denied FCRA registration. The second clause relating to habitual indulgence in dharna, rail roko and jail bhara could also lead to being denied FCRA registration. This aspect has high potential for misuse. The Home Minister made a statement in parliament that no genuine organisation will be penalised, and we need to monitor the implementation of this rule carefully. Any case of irrational implementation or harassment of an organisation must be raised with the department or judicial body. The new FCRA rules have very clear clauses for appeal. Any organisation, if harassed, should make use of these provisions.

One of the major challenges facing us today is to understand and follow the law of the land. Information gap and lack of understanding become causes for harassment. VANI has started intensive intervention to educate and mobilise organisations about the provisions and safeguards related to various regulatory mechanisms. VANI has conducted outreach regional workshops in collaboration with the Ministry of Home Affairs.

VANI and Financial Management Service Foundation (FMSF) also made a collaborative effort to comprehend the implication of FCRA 2010 and the 2011 rules. Subsequently, a document has been prepared to update voluntary organisations with the salient features of the new Act and address possible questions that they might have on the same.

VANI also organised several meetings inviting leaders from the development sector to discuss the challenges posed by the Act. This process was repeated at state and district levels. As a result of its continued efforts, VANI received a clarification from the Ministry of Home Affairs stating that FCRA registered voluntary organisations need not obtain prior approval while transferring funds to other FCRA registered organisations.

Changes in visa requirements

In 2010 the Indian government notified that volunteers who are keen to work in this sector will need to apply for a work visa and they must have an annual salary of $25,000. VANI took up the issue with the home ministry to consider volunteers as technical experts who provide their services at very low cost. Hence, the annual salary condition was waived. But we are still arguing with the government wherein approvals from three different ministries (Ministry of Home Affairs, Ministry of External Affairs and the nodal ministry) are needed to invite foreign visitors by voluntary organisations. These conditions are also applicable for visas required to attend conferences. VANI got numerous complaints from NGOs about visas being denied to their foreign guests because of security and political concerns. Such difficulties are primarily faced by guests from Pakistan, Afghanistan and Bangladesh. VANI raised these concerns with the Ministry of External Affairs and the Ministry of Home Affairs.

One of the reasons for difficulties in getting visas from Indian embassies abroad is lack of awareness among officials of Indian missions based in other countries. VANI organised a consultation on the subject and majority of the participants were of the view that there is a need to raise awareness with embassies so that the visa approval process becomes smooth.

Direct Taxes Code

In August 2009 the Finance Ministry released the draft Direct Taxes Code (DTC) with the objective of simplifying and rationalising the direct taxation regime in India. Although the proposed code simplifies taxation for corporates and individual tax payers, it reverses this where the voluntary sector is concerned. Since 2009 VANI has been advocating with the ministry to make the DTC friendly for the voluntary sector. As a result of the first stage of the campaign, which was undertaken with your support, many changes can be seen in the revised discussion paper which was released on 15 June 2010. VANI framed and articulated the concerns and suggestions of the voluntary sector. VANI mobilised not only its members but all voluntary organisations working in the development sector to send their appeals to the Finance Ministry and other policy makers. A number of representations and delegations were organised by VANI with the Ministry of Finance and the Standing Committee of Parliament on Finance. VANI was able to include the definition of 'charitable purpose' in the DTC draft, a provision to carry forward 15 per cent of surplus to the next year, and relaxation if funds are released in the month of March. But there are many areas still to be addressed such as demand for having choice of accrual and cash accounting systems, taxing of grants, carrying forward the surplus as well as changing the language of business activities.

An additional achievement of the process has been that the Finance Minister has started meeting delegations from the voluntary sector before preparing the annual budget of the country. Traditionally, the minister only met representatives from industry, trade unions and political parties during pre-budget consultations. VANI raised the demand for similar consultations with the voluntary sector.

II. National Consultation on 'Voluntary Sector in India: Perspective and Challenges'

VANI organised a National Consultation on 'Voluntary Sector in India: Perspective and Challenges' on 22 and 23 February 2011 at Vishwa Yuvak Kendra, New Delhi. More than 120 representatives of various voluntary organisations participated in the consultation. The main objective of the national consultation was to deliberate and work out a series of interventions and advocacy tools to enable and strengthen the voluntary sector to face the emerging challenges confronting the sector. Over the years, the voluntary sector has faced various challenges in the form of new and stringent laws and regulations, questions being raised on their credibility and accountability, and the shrinking of funding for the sector.

The National Consultation was divided into five major themes discussed over two days.

Regulatory Framework Related to the Voluntary Sector

The multiplicity of voluntary laws in India has prevented evolution and growth of a proper institutional framework for the sector. While voluntary organisations often feel harassed in complying with various legal obligations, institutions of the government too have not been effective in regulating the sector and securing legal compliance.

The first theme of the consultation highlighted issues related to the regulatory framework in India. From colonial registration laws to the new tax laws and FCRA which challenge the democratic space for the voluntary sector, the strategy of the state has been to limit the role and extent of the voluntary sector by introducing harsh regulations. Participants observed that the state was playing a dual role – in introducing a national policy for the voluntary sector and ignoring the sector's recommendations for providing an enabling environment. The government has even ignored the recommendation of the Second Administrative Reforms Commission that the voluntary sector be encouraged to play a role in nation building. As discussion on the new registration laws has begun, the conference hoped to see soon new and updated registration laws which would demand more accountability. A draft of the study on the regulatory framework prepared by VANI was also distributed to the participants for their comments and inputs.

Strengthening the Voluntary Sector

This session talked about internal strength of the sector which lies in good governance coming from credibility, accountability and transparency. An organisation's governing board plays a very important role in pushing for internal and external accountability. Good governance is very important for the growth and visibility of the sector. Instances of misuse of tax provisions, fraud and poor governance have been regularly reported in the media. This has created a negative generalisation among the masses about the functioning of the voluntary sector. There is also no effective institutional mechanism available to provide a supportive environment for the growth and development of the voluntary sector in the country. The National Policy on the Voluntary Sector highlights the need to create an accreditation body for better transparency. A task force under CAPART was set up for this, leading to the establishment of the National Accreditation Council of India. Though the voluntary sector supports the idea of accreditation, it wants a self-regulatory model of accreditation, an accreditation which is developed by the sector for the sector. VANI developed a Handbook on Good Governance, written by Ms. Aarti Madhusudan, which was released at the consultation. Copies of the handbook were also distributed to participants.

Giving in the New Age

This session discussed issues related to resources and funding. The last decade has witnessed the departure of many bi-laterals from India and the few of those who are left contribute a substantial portion of their funds directly to government-run programmes. Even multilaterals which operate in India contribute a significant portion of their budgets to flagship programmes of the Indian government. With India being considered an emerging economic power, this has led to the reduction of foreign aid to India, even though ground realities are contrary to this image. Even today, after nearly a decade of high economic growth, we still have a substantial number of our population marginalised and deprived of basic needs of life. The big question facing voluntary agencies is to invent methods to raise financial resources for innovations and rights-based interventions. Not only is there a need to conduct public awareness campaigns within India to mobilise local funds, but also advocate for change in the taxation regime to facilitate donations.

In India, individual donations to voluntary organisations have been meagre. Private philanthropy by individuals, trusts, foundations and corporates has not expanded commensurately. While India leads other developing nations in charitable giving, we still lag far behind developed economies. The laws in India do not promote the culture of giving as in developed countries such as the USA, where laws and regulations, like the inheritance tax, are favourable and encourage donation of private wealth. Thus there is urgent need to reform our laws and taxation policies to create a more supportive climate for donations.

Future of the Voluntary Sector

This session of the national consultation gathered all the earlier themes and discussed the challenges conditions facing the voluntary sector in India. The main question that was posed related to the perception of the future of the voluntary sector in the context of the challenges (regulatory challenges, resource and financial challenges, etc) discussed in the earlier themes. There were suggestions to focus more on the grassroots and to involve itself more in poverty related issues such as urban poverty, migration, inclusiveness, climate change and conflict over land and water resources, etc. There was also talk of reworking the strategy to connect to the middle class. It was concluded that to meet external challenges, the voluntary sector will need to introspect on its appropriate role as providers of quality services, as change agents to the deprived, as a protector of rights or as an innovator of development strategies. The answers gained from such introspection will help in guiding the voluntary sector, providing it with ways to make its future more secure for the kind of work the sector wants to do.

Future of Voluntary Sector: Global Trends and Challenges

The voluntary sector is going through some difficult challenges the world over. These challenges range from introduction of stricter legal and regulatory laws to the global financial crisis affecting the funding environment. This session made an attempt to discuss these global trends within the voluntary sector in various countries.

There is need for the voluntary sector to engage beyond existing boundaries. When we look at the future of the voluntary sector in relation to global trends, the first and most important challenge is the global financial crisis, which has curtailed the availability of resources to the UN flagship programme of Millennium Development Goals (MDGs). The financial crisis presents challenges to the philanthropic resources which NGOs rely on to deliver critical services.

Another major challenge which was discussed was the restrictive environment. In the last decade, a number of countries have adopted laws or policies imposing barriers and restrictions on the functioning of the voluntary sector. Several studies and reports have shown that these restrictive regulations by states on the voluntary sector are in response to the rising collective strength and influence of global civil society and the unfortunate 9/11 terrorist attack.

This session also discussed the trends of aid effectiveness where there are limitations and donor countries are pushing for aid to be utilised judiciously and effectively.

Strengthening the Voluntary Sector

On the one hand, the voluntary sector is recognised for its contribution and ability to reach the marginalised. On the other hand, voluntary organisations often feel harassed in complying with various legal obligations. Government institutions too have not been effective in regulating the sector and securing legal compliance. Questions are raised about the credibility and accountability of the sector. VANI has focussed on the theme of strengthening the sector from within to face various challenges. It has been realised time and again that in tough times one of the most important challenges in front of the sector is to maintain its credibility among the public and with the government.

VANI's continued efforts to strengthen the sector include research-based advocacy and developing toolkits on accountability.

I. Promoting Good Governance

Every year VANI conducts regional meetings as part of its efforts to strengthen the voluntary sector from within. It is very evident in these tough times that one of the most important challenges is to maintain the sector's credibility among the public, and bring accountability and transparency in the sector. With lack of foreign funding, the challenges before the voluntary sector have multiplied and the situation is only going to get worse. Participation and transparency are two important steps that lead to good governance which will give the sector credibility and acceptability. Organisations will have to maintain all the aspects and stages of accountability in order to impact the masses and the stakeholders they work with.

During the year 2010-11, VANI organised three regional meetings to demystify the latest tools available for good institutional and project management, and equip organisations on governance, statutory compliances and new management tools. The toolkit on good governance developed by VANI was distributed to the participants at these meetings.

II. Research based Advocacy

Research and advocacy are the most important thematic areas of VANI's work. Every year VANI carries out research studies on issues that are relevant to the voluntary sector. The genesis of these research studies comes from the various challenges the voluntary sector faces and the feedback VANI gets on these challenges from its members and partners during the state and regional meetings. This year VANI carried out three major research studies.

Civil Society Accountability: Principles and Practice-India Toolkit

CSOs are facing growing pressure from governments, the public as well as other stakeholders to be more open about their finances, accounts and funding sources. Stakeholders are also asking CSOs to provide evidence of the tangible impact created by their work. Efforts are being made by CSOs to strengthen internal governance, thereby strengthening the sector. One World Trust and the Commonwealth Foundation initiated a project across three Commonwealth countries – Belize, India and Uganda – to stimulate discussion among CSOs on accountability. In India, the project engaged CSOs in developing a set of common principles of accountability and developed a country-specific toolkit that provides assistance to organisations in putting accountability into practice. The toolkit is the culmination of the collaboration between VANI and One World

Trust. The main objective of the toolkit is to detail out principles of accountability that are relevant to the work and challenges faced by Indian CSOs and to bring together some of the innovative practices that have been established in India to address our accountability issues. This resource provides practical guidance, solutions and observations that we can learn from, adopt and implement in our organisations. CSOs in the twenty-first century are operating in a more complex environment. On the one hand, they have higher levels of visibility and influence on government, business and the development discourse, but on the other hand they are under new kinds of pressures in their 'operating environment' and the need to respond to challenges of accountability, transparency and legitimacy. The toolkit addresses and demonstrates how civil society can be accountable and transparent so that it can hold the government to account and act as a watchdog.

Handbook on Good Governance for the Voluntary Sector

The voluntary sector in India has had a phenomenal growth over the past two decades. The main reason for such a high growth was increase in foreign funding to the voluntary sector from foreign governments, international donors and corporates. This phenomenal growth also brought along with it a set of problems. With considerable flow of money into the sector, the credibility of the sector has frequently been questioned. Time and again, questions have been raised about its authenticity, intention and credibility. The sector should be ready to admit that some of these allegations, if not all, are not without substance. As the voluntary sector demands accountability from the government as well as the private sector, it thus becomes imperative for the sector to itself practice good and transparent governance. Since its inception, VANI has been promoting value-based voluntarism. Frequently VANI has published norms and standards of good governance practices for its member organisations.

Handbook on Good Governance is one such effort made by VANI to improve the governance of voluntary organisations in the country. The handbook defines the concept of good governance with an overview of the legal framework. It looks at the roles and responsibilities of the board, board process and structure, governance issues specific to federations and membership type organisations, and the fundamental difference between management and governance. Practically, the handbook gives tips on how to engage the board in an effective manner, board recruitment process and methodology. The handbook also shows ways to assess the board on various capacities.

Review of Legal and Fiscal Regulatory Mechanisms of the Voluntary Sector: A Seven Country Comparison

The purpose of this research study was to provide background and context to the issue of legal and fiscal regulatory mechanisms related to the voluntary sector in India. The report compared the regulatory mechanism related to the voluntary sector in seven countries. The research study also gave a framework for further discussions and stimulated debate and dialogue on the present regulatory mechanism among experts and leaders of the voluntary sector. The report will act as an advocacy tool as its findings will be discussed with relevant government departments and ministries. VANI is keen that this report helps the voluntary sector engage directly with relevant government departments on the regulatory issues facing the voluntary sector so that its voice and ideas are heard. India today has a vigorous voluntary sector playing a pivotal role in accelerating the process of social and economic development. There has been rapid expansion in the number of voluntary organisations in the country. The sector has also matured in terms of outreach, approach, diversity in types of organisational forms, the amount invested in the sector and the employment it offers to people at all skill levels. According to a study by the Central Statistical Organisation (CSO) there are as many as 3.3 million voluntary organisations operating in the country, registered under the Societies Registration Act of 1860, the Indian Trusts Act of 1882, Section 25 of the Companies Act of 1956 and the Bombay Public Trusts Act, 1950.

The multiplicity of charity laws in India has prevented evolution and growth of a proper institutional framework in this sector. Instances of misuse of tax provisions, fraud and poor governance have become frequent. Diversity of laws across the states has given rise to emergence of non-uniform practices in the management of voluntary organisations. If an institution registered in one state desires to expand its activities to any other area, it needs to comply with a different set of legal requirements.

The legal framework of societies and trusts determining incorporation of such voluntary organisations dates back to the nineteenth century. All organizations, whether not-for-profit institutions or development organisations, are clubbed into a single form under this law. A voluntary organisation working for the benefit and empowerment of the poor cannot define and differentiate itself from the so-called not-for-profit institutions like corporate hospitals, corporate educational institutions, maritime and port trusts, and even sports body like the BCCI.

III. Conducting Capacity Building and Awareness Workshops

Organising meetings and workshop at the national, regional and state levels is an important aspect of VANI's work. These meetings allow feedback from VANI's partners and other voluntary organisations on the various challenges faced by them. Besides this information on new policies related to the voluntary sector is also disseminated in these meetings. Capacities of partners are built on issues such as good governance and transparency. Sometimes, advocacy meetings are also organised with relevant government departments and leaders of the sector to discuss policy-based challenges.

VANI also organises state level meetings to reach more small and medium voluntary organisations. Every year, one theme is chosen and theme-based meetings are conducted all over India. In 2010-11 the theme for state meetings was on the challenges faced by the voluntary sector. The challenges faced by voluntary organisations were common in relation to the new regulatory changes imposed by the state, but there are some challenges which are different for each state. For example, states with conflict zones where there is Naxalism have a different set of challenges in comparison to non-Naxalite affected states.

IV. Providing and Sharing Information

🔗 Release of Toolkit Promoting CSO Accountability and Credibility in India

VANI and the Commonwealth Foundation jointly organised a one-day workshop on 'Promoting CSO Accountability and Credibility in India' at India International Centre, New Delhi on 12 May 2010. The workshop hosted the launch of the Civil Society Accountability Toolkit for India which was an outcome of a year-long project between VANI, One World Trust and the Commonwealth Foundation to identify the principles and practice of accountability for civil society in India. The toolkit was developed in order to provide support and advice to voluntary organisations in order to put these principles into practice. The toolkit was based on the mutual sharing and learnings from different voluntary organisations in India. It was launched by Shri. Jagdananda, State Information Commissioner of Orissa. The workshop also had sessions on the challenges faced in practicing accountability and transparency mechanisms in reality. It was concluded that to be accountable, the sector needs to have high standards of integrity.

There was also discussion around the Right To Information Act and whether voluntary organisations should be included in the ambit of the Act, particularly since many of these organisations use public money for the benefit of the public. In order to build and sustain their image, voluntary organisations have to become more transparent and accountable towards their stakeholders. Information sharing has to be a two-way process – if the sector demands accountability and transparency then it has to be ready to disclose information. The participants also agreed that the toolkit and similar publications would definitely be helpful in providing guidelines to voluntary organisations on how to practice the principle of accountability and regulate their governance practices in a more transparent manner.

🔗 Awareness Programmes on FCRA and DTC

During the state and regional meetings it became evident that many genuine groups working at the grassroots are victimised by the state because information regarding changes in the law and policies does not reach the grassroots. By conducting state level meetings and consultations, VANI undertakes a campaign to strengthen the sector from within so that it can safeguard genuine voluntary organisations. In these meetings, VANI also disseminates information regarding laws and regulations and solicits experiences of grassroots groups.

It becomes difficult though for VANI to reach all voluntary organisations and networks due to lack of time and resources. Thus VANI has asked all major NGOs and networks to allow VANI to share and discuss information regarding the new FCRA and DTC rules during their meetings, workshops or partner meetings. A member from VANI's team makes a presentation on the latest changes in taxation, FCRA and other related laws.

In this context, VANI made presentations in the meetings of the following organisations:

1. Annual GBM of VHAI at New Delhi on 10 November 2010.
2. Capacity building meeting on climate change at CASA Udaipur on 18 November 2010.
3. Annual convention of SAATHI-UP at Faizabad on 12-13 January 2011.

❧ VANI's Contribution to the Approach Paper Prepared by Civil Society on the 12th Five Year Plan

The Planning Commission of India has been preparing its approach paper for the 12th Five Year Plan, which will be the base document for the Plan itself. This time the Planning Commission has involved leading voluntary organisations, seeking their inputs, suggestions and experiences when preparing the approach paper. VANI, being an apex body of voluntary organisations in India, also participated in the process. VANI's main contribution to the approach paper was that of the level of engagement between NGOs and the government. VANI has raised the issue of voluntary organisations being treated as sub-contractors for implementing government projects and flagship programmes. The work done by a voluntary organisation is always assessed in numbers by the government department, but the actual work done is much beyond numbers. In the approach paper, VANI demanded that if the government wants voluntary organisations to play a positive role in implementing MDGs, then the role has to be more inclusive in the planning, implementing and monitoring of development projects.

V. International Initiatives

VANI coordinates efforts at an international level by attending various international meetings and forums of international civil society and voluntary organisations to share information as well as discuss the global issues and challenges facing the voluntary sector all over the world.

❧ Building Global Linkages Among Voluntary Organisations

Globally, the voluntary sector has grown to become a valid third sector along with agriculture and industry. There has been a shift in the role of the voluntary sector, and there is need for the sector to engage regionally (across national/state borders) in programmes and issues that touch the lives of ordinary people. The sector should choose the most appropriate role it would like to play.

In the era of globalisation, where the world is becoming one big market and economic boundaries of countries are dissolving, it has also thrown up new challenges like growing inequality across and within nations, volatility in financial markets and environmental deterioration. A majority of developing countries remain removed from the process of economic growth.

Thus, it becomes necessary for a network of voluntary organisations like VANI to coordinate efforts at the international level, especially because most developing countries face similar problems, viz., poverty, unemployment, illiteracy, gender inequality, etc. There is an urgent need to share knowledge, expertise and experiences with networks/NGOs in other countries so that we can all benefit and which, in turn, will lead to a positive effect on development programmes across the globe. Attempts are being made to work at the global level through forming and strengthening networks and linking with existing networks.

VANI works and interacts closely with several other national networks and is part of several international network organisations. These networks include:

✿ ABONG (Associação Brasileira de Organizações Não Governamentais)

- ✿ ACCION (Association of Chilean Non-Governmental Organisations)
- ✿ CONGAD (Conseil des ONG d'Appui au Développement)
- ✿ COORDINATION SUD (Coordination SUD was set up in 1994 to bring together French international solidarity organisations)
- ✿ INTRAC (The International NGO Training and Research Centre)
- ✿ CIVICUS (World Alliance for Citizen Participation, an international alliance of members and partners which constitutes an influential network of organisations)
- ✿ CONCORD (The European Confederation of Development and Relief NGOs)

VANI also acts as the secretariat for developing the Asian Coalition of National Platforms. The objective of this coalition is to organise national platforms in the Asian region to present an articulated voice of the region. The issues raised are primarily concerned with creating an enabling environment. Members of the Asian Coalition are Nepal, Bangladesh, East Timor, Japan, Cambodia, Philippines, Indonesia and India.

Non-Governmental Diplomacy: Position Papers on Six Themes

VANI is preparing a common position paper under the following six thematic issues. These exercises are aimed at working out a common position among national NGO platforms.

👉 Development Finance in India

👉 Climate Change in India

👉 Agricultural Marketing in India

👉 Access to Water and Sanitation in India

👉 Conflict Prevention and Resolution in India. The Fight Against Social Exclusion and Inequalities in India

Membership as Means to Express Solidarity

As an apex body of voluntary organisations in India, members are the backbone of VANI. VANI currently has 362 direct members with an outreach to more than 5,000 organisations. Last year VANI inducted 29 new members. VANI's members are present in almost all the states of India. The number of voluntary organisation who are members gives strength to VANI's advocacy campaigns on various issues with the government. Membership in VANI is not merely for numbers but is an expression of solidarity.

Membership Data

Zone Wise VANI Members

I. 22nd Annual General Body Meeting

The 22nd annual general body meeting of VANI was held at CASA Resource Centre Auditorium, Udaipur on 19 September 2010. The AGM was attended by 35 members. The number was short of the required quorum, thus VANI reconvened the meeting after adjourning the meeting. VANI's chairperson welcomed all the members and introduced them to the challenges that the voluntary sector is facing such as new laws and policies, shrinking of resources, etc.

The annual report and the financial report were also presented at the AGM. The annual report highlighted the activities planned during the year and the activities completed during the past year. Copies of the draft annual report were distributed to the members. The members then approved the annual report. A film showcasing the history and advent of VANI was also shown. A presentation was also made by a sub-committee of the working committee on the review of the work done by VANI. The sub-committee analysed the work done by VANI so far and VANI as an organisation, looking at the challenges faced by VANI and VANI's shortcomings. The sub-committee suggested the types of work that should be done by VANI in the future which will help VANI meet its goals.

The annual work plan, explaining the kind of work VANI would take up in the coming year, was also presented to the general body for inputs and suggestions. The general body approved the work plan. Members raised the issues and challenges faced by them while working in their particular areas. The maximum challenges are faced by organisations working in conflict states where they face the issue of Naxalism. They requested the VANI working committee to take up the issues and challenges faced by them in its advocacy with various government departments.

II. Felicitation of Rajesh Tandon

VANI organised a felicitation ceremony for Dr Rajesh Tandon, President, PRIA and former chairperson of VANI for his contribution to the voluntary development sector over the last 30 years and his contribution to the growth of VANI

as an apex body of voluntary organisations in India. The ceremony was held on 19 September 2010 in Udaipur.

In his lecture at the felicitation ceremony, Dr Tandon shared his journey in the voluntary sector which started from Seva Mandir in Udaipur. He voiced his thoughts on the shrinking democratic values in the country where there is now less room for debate and discussion and more room for violence. Market forces have made us all consumers and the poor, who were earlier beneficiaries of the state, have now become consumers of big companies. He emphasised that voluntary action is necessary for social transformation, and the voluntary sector should work together to restore receding democratic values in citizens.

Later, he interacted with the audience, answering their questions and advising them to keep working to restore the faith of people in democracy and democratic values by promoting the culture of debate and discussions at the village level.

Media and Publications

For an apex body of voluntary organisations, information sharing is a key activity. Information is collected and collated, and then shared with partners and other voluntary organisations. The information outflow by VANI is done by a variety of means, such as through its website, an e-newsletter and a magazine. VANI shares information about recent and updated programmes and activities at the appropriate time. VANI also hosts a library which stores a variety of information in the form of books, magazines, journals and periodicals related to voluntarism and the voluntary sector.

Website

VANI's website is the one of the latest and best tools to provide updated information to its members and non-members on various issues affecting the voluntary sector.

VANI maintains two website at its secretariat:

<http://www.vaniindia.org> and <http://www.ngo-asia.org>

E-Newsletter

VANI's newsletter e-vani is published every month with latest news about the voluntary development sector, and updates on activities and programmes.

Magazine

VANI publishes a quarterly magazine titled Civil Society Voices. The magazine is published in both English and Hindi so that more voluntary organisations can benefit from it. The last two issues of the magazine were on:

- ✎ Partnership in Development
- ✎ Registration of Voluntary Organisations in India

Other Issues Addressed in 2010-11

- ✎ Income tax harassments
- ✎ Compilation of accounts for non-profit institutions in India
- ✎ Regulatory regime for voluntary organisations
- ✎ Support cause of poor and marginalised and landless

A 3D pie chart illustrating the distribution of 366 total votes across four regions. The chart is divided into four colored slices: blue for North (96 votes), red for East (121 votes), green for South (68 votes), and purple for West (77 votes). Each slice is labeled with its region name and the corresponding number of votes. The chart is shown from an isometric perspective, giving it a three-dimensional appearance.

Region	Votes
North	96
East	121
South	68
West	77
Total	366
